

THE HORSESHOE BAR

Long acknowledged as Dublin's number one meeting place, The Horseshoe Bar has seen it all down through the years. The bar's name derives from the shape of its counter – that of a horseshoe – although some think it is through a long association with the racing and hunting set who often sat around the bar counter discussing the form and guessing the odds.

Atmospheric and wholly distinctive, the Horseshoe Bar has always been a meeting point for politicians and journalists, sportsmen and movie stars, visiting dignitaries and local personalities. It opened in 1957 and was designed by Sam Stephenson. It is handsome and evocative, with Hogarth prints, a white counter top and shining brass, and if its rich red walls could talk they would have some fascinating stories to tell.

An Irish institution with class, character and distinction, to experience the unique 'craic' in The Horseshoe Bar is to get a true flavour of Irish life.

A distinctive feature are the Hogarth(1697-1764) Prints above the bar - Hogarth, famous for his satirical prints condemning social ills of the era (1700's) like the cheap gin that drove the poor to unemployment, dissolution, suicide, and the dangers of moral laxity among the moneyed classes.
